Module 1 Theories and Approaches of Peace and Conflict Studies

Introduction to Peace and Conflict Studies

Lecturer: Dr. Alexander Spencer

Details: Tuesday, 3 pm – 5 pm/ synchronous and asynchronous online sessions
4 CP

Language: English

Note: Mandatory First Term Seminar - Please register via LSF until the 30th of October!

Content:

The lecture 'Introduction to Peace and Conflict Studies' will examine some of the key concepts of and theoretical approaches to peace and conflict. It will commence in part one by considering the developments of the discipline and reflecting on the seemingly straightforward terms such as "peace" and "conflict". Part two will turn to different macro-theoretical explanations for peace and conflict in situations of social interaction. This will include approaches which examine the role of power, institutions, democracy, culture, language, gender, (post-)colonialism and the environment in peace and conflict. The final session will debate the connections between pop-culture and conflict by examining the use of art as a means of addressing conflict. The lecture will be supplemented by the reading course taught by Lena Merkle which will continue to examine and discuss topics of the lecture from alternative perspectives and through exemplary case studies.

This course starts in the first week of December! The second part of the course will take part in form of block sessions (January/February)

Content:

Over the past 25 years international statebuilding became a major element in the foreign policies of leading states, the UN and other international organizations. Established in the early 1990s as a key instrument to address fragile statehood, international statebuilding initially aimed at stabilization and peace in post-war societies. Soon, this agenda evolved into a preventive and assisting strategy in situations of economic and institutional collapse.

These initial intentions have been frustrated by reality. In a number of cases, from Bosnia, Sierra Leone, East-Timor to Dafur, Afghanistan or Iraq, international statebuilding produced rather unsustainable and fragile forms of peace and security. Increasingly, critical scholarship questioned international statebuilding for its one-size-fits-all approaches ignoring the particular cultural, social and historical conditions in the respective societies and its proximity to a hegemonic, neo-colonial, Western project of 'liberal peace'.

Recent developments in the field of peace intervention indicate anew shift in strategy. Facing problems of resistance, hybridity and complexity more context sensitive, non-linear, locally driven approaches are applied. They are presented as correctives to earlier failures, in particular to those related with universalist claims of liberal statebuilding. At the same time, they indicate a fundamental shift in peacebuilding values from confidence in problem solving and intervention towards scepticism in any intentional and goal-oriented form of intervening. While on the one hand the rejection of 'traditional' forms of governance and problem solving has been welcomed among critics it also raises the question: are there new forms of global governance and domination emerging?

Starting with a critical discussion of the evolution of concepts and practices of statebuilding and peace-intervention since the early 1990s, the seminar subsequently introduces major debates about their legitimacy and effectiveness. During the course we compare initial statebuilding approaches with current developments in the field. We will engage with scholarly and political debates on state failure, international security, the relation of peace- and statebuilding, external democratization, development and conflict in the light of shifting forms of global governance. To unpack the evolving nature of differing forms of peace activity we will examine how scholarship and politics react on the changes and thereby contribute to the construction of problems and solutions in both theory and practice of international statebuilding and intervention. A central objective of the course is to build a bridge between political discourses, international practice and scholarship as to provide a starting point for students' own research activity and study on this core subject of peace and conflict studies

Content:

This course introduces students to the European Union's (EU) political system with a particular focus on the process of European integration within the EU and the multi-level nature of this polity. The course is centered on the notion of ongoing and multiple crises in European integration and how they challenge both the EU itself as well as research and theorizing on European integration. In discussing what different theoretical approaches can deliver in order to understand, explain (and thus possibly change) the crisis dynamics that have shaped EU politics in the past years, the seminar takes stock of what is "available" in theoretical terms and how research on European integration could or should develop in the future.

As an introduction to the political science perspective in the MA European Studies, it offers a) a basic overview on the political system, actors and processes of the EU's political system, b) a deepened understanding of integration dynamics and c) approaches to scientifically analyze these.

Through group-based and independent activities, participants will learn to analyze and comprehend European integration through different analytical lenses and thereby develop their skills in applying different political science approaches to specific phenomena, in particular to contemporary questions the EU is currently facing.

European Social Integration. Towards a European Society?

Note: Assignments via LSF until the 25th of October. Please enroll for the class.

Content:

During the last decades, the political and economic processes of European integration increasingly affected and shaped individual life worlds as well. People do no longer only feel French or Portuguese or compare to their own national fellow citizens. They increasingly think, feel or act in a European way as transnational patients, students, friends or workers. The research-oriented seminar explores this emerging European social space and introduces the key theories and results describing, explaining and measuring these processes. Introducing many vivid empirical examples and applying different didactic methods, we will analyze and discuss in depth the problems and challenges linked to this. E.g. a simulation forms part of the course. Thus, participants will learn to distinguish different analytical perspectives, and how to apply them to questions such as: What kind of transactions and interactions are typical in Europe and why? Is there such thing as a European society? How can we observe and measure processes of transnationalisation and Europeanisation? Who are the beneficiaries of European integration? What has Interrail to do with the European Union?

Content:

After the wave of Arab uprisings in 2010-2011, while some countries, such as Tunisia and Egypt are still at the risk of political instability, other countries, such as Syria, Libya and Yemen, plunged into a civil war, losing their stability and turning into a fragile state. Drawing on Edward Azar's theory of Protracted Social Conflict (PSC) (1990) and its adaptation Contemporary Transnational Conflict (TNC) (2016) by Oliver Ramsbotham, Tom Woodhouse and Hugh Miall, the Arab uprisings are the outcomes of the prevailing PSCs in the region. The uprising (as an incident) was just the trigger and turning point when the covert and latent PSCs turned to be overt and violent.

Through having a closer look at the socio-political, socio-economic, and external factors, this seminar will contribute to a better understanding of the MENA region and its local conflicts beyond the mainstream discourse (democracy vs. autocracy). The students in the seminar will work on explicating the different PSCs in the region as well as exploring approaches to their transformation.

(If possible) The last session of the seminar will be an excursion to Berlin to visit an organization working on the MENA region.

Module 7 Sustainable Development and Resource Management

International Organizations in Sustainability Governance

Lecturer: Dr. Ulrike Zeigermann

Details:

Tuesday, 3 pm – 5 pm/ synchronous and asynchronous online sessions

4/6 CP

Language: English

Note: Please register for the course via LSF until the 25th of October or send an email to ulrike.zeigermann@ovgu.de!

Our first live zoom session will be organized on 27 October at 11am (Magdeburg time) to discuss the course structure and to get to know the seminar group. Please register for the seminar on LSF or send me an email to get the information on how to join the moodle course and the zoom session.

Content:

In this seminar we want to examine whether international organizations are still fulfilling their original purpose as problem solvers in this moment of global political crises, or whether they themselves are victims of increasing polarization. Hereby, we focus on the role of international organizations in sustainability governance. First, we will take a critical look at scientific debates on the origin, function and benefit of international organizations. Using the example of the challenges facing international organizations in the field of climate, health, trade, human rights and security, we will examine current questions of legitimacy, power and structure with which respective institutions are confronted. In addition to an examination of theoretical knowledge, we want to offer the most multifaceted insight possible through various digital working formats such as virtual simulations or video chats with representatives from international organizations working on sustainability issues, which will serve as a basis for our own discussions. The goal of the seminar is to identify the requirements of international organizations for sustainability governance the 21st century.

Global Sustainability Governance

Lecturer: Prof. Dr. Michael Böcher

Details:

Tuesday, 11 am – 1 pm/ Online/ synchronous and asynchronous sessions

4/6 CP

Language: English

Note: Please register for the course via LSF until the 30th of October!

Content:

Aim of the seminar is to discuss possibilities and limitations of global sustainability governance. After a general introduction and based on the UN's 17 Sustainable Development Goals (SDG), current trends, achievements, and problems of realizing global sustainability should be illustrated and critically evaluated. The main concept of the seminar is that different student groups research individually one of the 17 SDG in detail and present their findings to the group. As a result, it will be assessed which of the SDG are more realistic to achieve than others and if there are even contradictory goals.

Urban Conflicts

Lecturer: Prof. Dr. Heiko Schrader

Details:

Tuesday, 11 am – 1 pm/ Online

4/6 CP

Language: English

Note: Please register for the course via LSF until the 25th of October!

Content:

This seminar takes a focus on urban conflict. We begin with the question about the relation between conflict, violence and cities. After referring to the “right of the city” approach, discussing of whether access to the city is “free” or “regulated” we take up certain topics of urban sociology and cases concerning gentrification, protest of social movements, street gangs, the Mafia, divided and contested cities, slums and their development.

This is a hybrid seminar. We will start online via Zoom and depending on the situation we will change into a regular seminar.

Module 8 Violence and Media

Humour and Social Conflicts

Lecturer: Daniel Beck

Details:

Thursday, 11 am – 1 pm / G40 - R140/ Synchronous Online Seminar

4/6 CP

Language: English

Note: Please register for the course via LSF until the 30th of October!

Content:

The seminar will give insights into the multidimensional use of humour in social conflicts. Humour is seen as a social phenomenon which is present in most situations of everyday life and has to be taken seriously.

Throughout the seminar will be debates about the positive or negative evaluation of humour. While humour shows its positive effect as a tool for nonviolent resistance and for the critique of disgraces it is also used for the communication of racist ideologies. We will discuss the limits of free speech, the influence of political humour in general, international humour scandals, social movements and identity, the specific background of consumers and creators, the role of humour in campaigns and many more examples. We will also look at how humour has been used as a tool to combat oppression and will question the effectiveness (and limits) of humour as a tool for achieving political change. Needless to say, that Donald Trump, Boris Johnson and their style of politics are an unavoidable topic in a seminar on humour.

Students will discuss the topics and introduce each other to different case studies.

Journalists as Actors in War and Armed Conflict

Lecturer: Prof. Dr. Eric Chauvistré (FH)

Details:

Wednesday, 8:15 am – 9:45 am/ Synchronous Online Seminar

4/6 CP

Language: English

Note: Please register for the course by sending an email to eric.chauvistre@h2.de until the 25th of October.

Content:

When studying wars, military affairs and violent conflicts, we need to be aware of the specific and presumably increasing role journalists play in that context. The seminar will therefore focus on the relationship and interaction between journalists covering these issues, both in newsrooms and on the ground, and other relevant actors involved in armed conflicts and military affairs. The various sets of players include government agencies, elected officials, armed forces, corporate lobbyists, private contractors, militia groups, aid workers or international organisations. Students should acquire a sound understanding of the challenges these interactions pose for both journalists and the other relevant players involved.

Content:

In fiktionalen Kulturprodukten wie Spielfilmen und Computerspielen bilden sich Vorstellungen von ethischen Problemen, Politik und Gesellschaft ab, die in den filmischen bzw. informationstechnologischen Entwicklungs- und Produktionsprozess zwangsläufig mit eingebracht werden. Auch vermeintlich völlig unpolitische unterhaltende Spielfilme und Spiele transportieren dabei oft historische, moralische, gesellschaftliche und politische Informationen, Interpretationen und Meinungen. Diese sind zuweilen nicht einmal den Macherinnen und Machern selbst überhaupt konkret bewusst, aber trotzdem geeignet, die politischen Meinungen und moralischen Einstellungen der Rezipientinnen und Rezipienten (hier besonders in Hinblick auf Informationstechnologien) zu beeinflussen.

In diesem Seminar soll an verschiedenen Beispielen untersucht werden, welche Vorstellungen unserer sozialen und technischen Welt in verschiedene Spielfilme und Computerspiele inhaltlich Eingang gefunden haben bzw. welche Weltbilder sich jeweils aus deren Gestaltung ergeben und wie diese auf die Rezipient*innen wirken.

Nach 2-3 Einführungssitzungen wird als Muster die Analyse eines Spielfilms bzw. Spiels vorgestellt. Die Aufgabe der TeilnehmerInnen besteht anschließend darin, in 2er- oder 3er-Teams ebenfalls ein selbst ausgewähltes Medienprodukt (im ersten Block Spielfilme, im zweiten Block Computerspiele) auf seinen philosophisch-moralischen bzw. sozialwissenschaftlich relevanten Gehalt hin zu analysieren und diese Analyse im Seminar vorzustellen.

Module 9 Global Justice

International Human Rights Protection

Lecturer: Josephin Winkler

Details:

Thursday, 3 pm – 5 pm / G40 - R227/ hybrid sessions

4/6 CP

Language: English

Note: Please register via LSF for the course until the 30th of October!

Organization: The course will be split into permanent groups of max. 5 students. Max. 20 students can participate.

Your group will meet for 60 min every week at a fixed time on Thursday afternoon, complete a given task and discuss with each other about given discussion questions. I will join every group in the last 15 min to see how it is going, to discuss and to answer questions. You will have to hand in minutes of your results every week.

Group 1: 15.00-16.00, G40 - 325

Group 2: 15.30-16.30, G40 - 227

Group 3: 16.05-17.05, G40 - 325

Group 4: 16.30-17.30, online

The groups will form in the first session on October 29 for which we will all meet in Zoom. Before the first session takes place, I will send a mail to those registered to the course via LSF with more information.

(If someone does not conform to the pandemic rules like physical distancing, I will immediately switch the seminar to the online format for all groups.)

Content:

Every person is entitled to certain fundamental rights. Those human rights include civil and political rights as well as economic, social and cultural ones. The seminar tries to answer the following questions: Can we really assume that human rights are universal? Where are the limitations of human rights? What are the states' duties? How can human rights be protected internationally and how strong is that protection? What is discrimination?

The students will be able to discuss these issues with each other after having had topical inputs by the teacher. They will often work with specific cases of (alleged) human rights violations that have happened in the past or are currently happening. The seminar will combine views from social sciences, ethics and law.

After having completed the seminar, the students will be able

- to describe the international human rights regime,
- to critically discuss the idea of human rights in aspects like universality, restrictions and implementation,
- to assess if and to what extent certain cases may amount to human rights violations.

Colonial Objects and Translocation

Lecturer: Dr. Nora Pleßke

Details:

Thursday, 5 pm – 7 pm/ Online

Note: Please register for the course via LSF and sign in for the course on the E-Learning OVGU-platform (Moodle).

Content:

The toppling statues of colonizers and slave traders worldwide in the course of the Black Lives Matter Movement has brought to attention the material heritage of colonialism. In Germany, the question on how to deal with material culture from the often-neglected colonial past has only recently come up with the establishment of the Humboldt Forum in Berlin's reconstructed Castle which is to house the ethnological collection. While British museums have struggled with new formats of presenting the erstwhile collected or plundered things in a more self-conscious way, issues of provenance and restitution of artefacts with a colonial background now more and more often make the news.

In this seminar, we will focus on the translocation of colonial objects in the Second British Empire. We will assess the physical transplantation of material objects from former colonies to the imperial motherland as well as the transformation of meaning and embedding in new systems of value. After a historical overview of the British Empire during the long nineteenth century and an introduction to material culture studies and transcultural theories, we will especially investigate different forms of appropriation from the objects themselves to their representations in various textual and visual media. For instance, we will consider the transformation of trading goods in the context of slavery, analyze illustrations of artefacts in journals of exploration, inquire into the description of things in exhibition catalogues, decipher early commercials of exotic commodities, elucidate the arrangement of artefacts in anthropological museums, and explore the narrative rendering of things in literary texts. Creating their own media project on a topic of their choice will allow students to thoroughly engage with the cultural-historical complexities of today's material colonial heritage.

Regelmäßig – so u.a. anlässlich des ersten Jahrestages des Anschlags von Halle – wird in den Medien darauf verwiesen, dass ein beträchtlicher Teil der Schülerinnen und Schüler in Deutschland den historischen Ort Auschwitz nicht zuordnen kann. Dabei reduzieren eben diese Medien wie auch teilweise die ihnen zu Grunde liegenden Befragungen das einzigartige Menschheitsverbrechen des Holocaust auf dessen Höhepunkt und nur einen Ort. Unbeachtet bleiben dabei der Weg dorthin, die Frage nach Verbrechen außerhalb der Vernichtungslager, nach der Rolle von scheinbar unbeteiligten Zuschauern vor allem im Deutschen Reich, aber auch in anderen Teilen Europas und zahlreiche andere Fragen, denen im Laufe des Seminars nachgegangen werden soll.

Das Seminar findet digital statt, Materialien werden über das E-Learning-Portal der OVGU und die Universitätsbibliothek bereitgestellt und können von allen Teilnehmer*innen eingebracht werden. Einzelnen Zoom-Termine – auch in kleineren Gruppen – werden von Zeit zu Zeit verabredet.

Students' Research Training in the Framework of an Excursion to Kyrgyzstan in March, 2021

Valerie Waldow/Heiko Schrader (4 SWS: 2 SWS during the winter term: Mon 1-3 pm online with lecturers and students from AUCA, several research team meetings with the teachers in Dec/Jan on Wed, 9-11hrs in Room 225, block seminar during the excursion) / teachers from AUCA: Galina Gorborukova and Makhinur Mamatova

Topic: Gender and Violence

Target Group: Master students of PACS and Social Science

During the winter term we will prepare the excursion to Bishkek.

Topics of the seminar:

- Regional knowledge on Central Asia and particularly Kyrgyzstan
- Gender and violence in theory
- Gender and violence in Central Asia

The excursion will aim at taking qualitative expert interviews from Women's NGOs and other experts. We will work together with teachers and students from the American University of Central Asia in Bishkek within a time period of two weeks. Students can prolong their stay individually. Partial finance will be provided for the research period. The individual amount depends on the number of participants. There is a limited number of places for the excursion, so that students have to enter into competition. The preparation can be booked independently from the excursion (but not vice versa)

Prerequisite for the excursion:

- Having participated in qualitative methods: interviews.
- High motivation, to be expressed by a letter of intent to be provided until..., and during the seminar.
- An additional plus is the knowledge of Russian language.

Please be aware that the participation in the excursion requires a strong labor input also beyond the time of the excursion, because participants have to write a joint research report afterwards.

Organization: We will start with a joint Zoom seminar with the colleagues and students from Bishkek. Once students have been affiliated to their research teams, these teams will have their own meetings for a certain period. Depending on the Corona situation, we will prepare the excursion in January or the online research.

There will be available a moodle platform where we will provide literature and the outline. Please register in the moodle platform, so that we can communicate with you.

Dieses Bachelor- und Masterkolloquium richtet sich an alle, die bei mir schreiben oder von mir Beratung wollen. In Gruppendiskussionen haben Sie Gelegenheit, Ihre Ideen oder auch einzelne Arbeitsschritte vorzustellen (auf Deutsch oder Englisch). Diesbezüglich geht es auch um methodische Beratung bei empirischer Forschung. Das Seminar basiert auf Reziprozität, d.h. Sie bilden das Auditorium und sind auch selbst Vortragende, wo Sie erwarten, dass ZuhörerInnen da sind. Laut SO ist die Teilnahme an einem dieser Kolloquia und eine Präsentation verbindlich, nach dem neuen PO erhalten Sie die ausgewiesenen credits. Ich biete aber auch, sofern nicht alle Slots vergeben werden, Einzelberatungen in diesem Zeitraum an, wo Sie sich außerhalb der üblichen Sprechzeit mit mir beraten können. Zur Festlegung der Termine bitte ich alle Interessierten, in der ersten Semesterwoche zu kommen.

This Master- and PhD Seminar is opened for those of you who want to write their thesis with me as their supervisor. You will have the opportunity to present ideas or certain primary results (in German or English). I will also provide methodological advice. The seminar is based on reciprocity, which means that you will be part of the auditorial and on another occasion present your work where you expect others to be present. According to our SO you are obliged to take part and present your ideas in one of such colloquia, and our new PO offers you the specified number of credits. If not all slots during the semester are booked by participants I will also offer single consultations during the seminar time, so that you can discuss your ideas with me outside my regular office hours. Please show up in the first week of the semester, so that we can make the schedule.

Hybrid-Seminar: Wir beginnen online via Zoom und je nach Corona-Verlauf gehen wir zur Präsenz über.

This is a hybrid-Seminar: we begin online via Zoom and may switch to regular seminar, depending on the corona-situation.

Das Kolloquium bietet einleitend eine knappe Übersicht zum Vorgehen bei der Erstellung von Abschlussarbeiten (erste Sitzung). Im Mittelpunkt stehen dann die individuellen Arbeiten der Teilnehmenden, die ihre Arbeitskonzepte vorstellen und gegenseitig kommentieren. Am Ende des Kolloquiums hat jede*r Teilnehmer*in seine Arbeit individuell diskutiert und erlernt, sowohl die eigene als auch Arbeiten anderer kritisch zu hinterfragen und kommentieren, um so begleitend zum eigenen Arbeitsprozess das Erstellen von Abschlussarbeiten zu erlernen.
